For favored bets, the bet odds will start with a negative number and they tell you how much you need to bet to win $100.

A $250 bet on the Celtics on the moneyline, meaning if they win the game by any margin the bet wins, would win $100 (plus a return of the original $250 bet).

Decimal and fractional odds are more common outside the United States, but can be found in some American sportsbooks as well.

Multiply the $10 by the numerator, which in this case is seven, then divide by the denominator, which is four.

Underdog bets will have the numerator bigger than the denominator, as in the examples above.

Think of a coin flip.

If you are given odds better than one-in-two, it's a good bet.

Typically you won't know the exact odds because sporting events aren't that predictable, but this is a key principle to keep in mind when evaluating a bet, especially on a moneyline.
