The spread, also referred to as the line, is used to even the odds between two unevenly matched teams.

Bookmakers set a spread with the hopes of getting equal action on both sides of a game.

For example, the Colts are a -3 point favorite against the Texans.

The -3 points is the spread.

If these teams were widely considered equal and bookmakers put the spread at -10, they wouldn't get equal money as Texans +10 would likely be pounded by bettors.

In the above example, a Colts moneyline bet doesn't have any other requirements other than they win the game.
