The problem is that mobile apps never expire, for example, people can reopen the APP after a month without the need to login again.

Use it less than a week and get a new token before the old token expires.

This is not different than the normal concept of session and cookies.

Accordingly, on the server side, create a restful API named /token/extend which will return a new token if given a valid token.

The HttpOnly flag protects the cookies from being accessed by JavaScript and pr events XSS attack.

As long as we make the browsers, user devices and tokens transmission safe, toke n revocation mechanism is not necessary anymore.

This of course can be extremely bad for punters who have obtained great value p rices on events far into the future.
