Since the topic has become even more vital in the recent years, it's about time for us to talk about AliExpress sellers in depth. Some people are disappointed with the Chinese online store because of fraudsters, while the others don't experience any problems with finding a good and reliable seller. What's the reason? Is there some sort of secret? There isn't. The thing is that buyers are divided into those who carefully check a seller's history and those who don't. It's to people belonging to the latter category we want to remind of what one needs to pay attention to BEFORE buying.

Thirdly, it is always easier to negotiate with an understanding person. You'll probably have to contact the seller if a conflict arises; for example, after you open a dispute.

A reliable seller will likely approve a proposed solution if you are right. With this action, they show that they agree with your vision of the situation and are willing to reach an agreement as soon as possible, meaning that you'll automatically receive your money back. An unscrupulous seller, on the contrary, will be spending your time in all possible ways including ignoring, false promises, and other delaying tactics.

Fourthly, a reliable seller values their reputation, reviews, and rating. That's why one can negotiate with them without too many troubles: a buyer only needs to hint that they're about to leave a negative feedback, and the issue will be resolved. It's a blackmail of some sort, but it can help.
