Still, preelection polls showed both ballot measures faced an uphill fight to win a majority.

More than 30 other states allow sports betting, but gambling in California is currently limited to Native American casinos, horse tracks, card rooms and the state lottery.

Proposition 26 would have allowed casinos and the state's four major horse tracks to offer sports betting in person.

Large gaming companies would have had to partner with a tribe involved in gambling or tribes could have entered the market on their own.

However, that revenue might have been offset if people were to spend money on sports gambling instead of shopping or buying lottery tickets.

The No on Prop 26 campaign, funded largely by card rooms that stood to lose out, said the measure would have given a handful of wealthy and powerful tribes

“a virtual monopoly on all gaming in California.”
