SINGAPORE: The demonstration URL, comprising solely of random numbers, to this illegal sports betting website was as dubious as it could get.

A successful login led to the main interface, which was designed in soothing blue, red and grey, but still managed to produce a sensory overload.

The menu on the left listed a multitude of sports, from football to chess, while the main portion in the middle showed the different matches users could bet on for that sport, from the major leagues to obscure friendlies in little known countries.

Littering the screen was a plethora of numbers, indicating different odds, and tiny buttons that allowed users to place a wager, watch the match or add it to their favourites.

Each time a team scored, a pop-up appeared with a little jingle.

But the right side of the screen was what stood out the most.

It was filled with large, colourful banners that led to different types of gambling "mini games".

The main toolbar at the top had a prominent button, with a fiery symbol no less, directing users to an online casino.

Others will sometimes do the unthinkable, attempting to make up all their losses from the previous weekend in one fell swoop.

Sometimes, if you're having a winning week, that solo game can be a perfect spot to pounce on a live-action play.

Since there's no need to bounce from game to game, when there's only one contest on the schedule, playing that first-TD proposition is always fun, especially when you cash.
