Partner.

The new DSP program was part of Amazon's efforts to solve its problems with last-mile delivery. The company wanted to move faster than the two-day Prime sta ndard, and subcontractors made delivery both cheaper and more flexible. And it w orked: Less than a year after first advertising for the program in 2018, one-day delivery made its first appearance in a 2019 earnings call, the beginning of a ramp-up in delivery speed that continued until the pandemic began in March 2020.

By August 2020, more than 1,300 DSP companies had launched across the U.S., Can ada and Europe.

Francisco Ramos, an owner based in Denver, said he believes that Amazon's sy stem can make owners even more than the money advertised, and that those who fai l to hit the range are simply making poor business decisions. Ramos, who feels s ympathy for Amazon's business practices, believes the company's decision -making is oriented toward maintaining delivery speeds and pleasing the customer

, sometimes regardless of the consequences for specific DSPs. For example, Ramos said that Amazon sometimes added DSPs with new, less-qualified owners just to e nsure that deliveries were always fast (especially during the peak months of the) Tj T* BT /
