Furthermore, there isn't any indication that this will change anytime soon. The negotiations of the 2021 Florida gaming compact highlighted the problems associated with online gambling in Florida.

In a special session, the House passed the compact by a 97-17 margin, while the Senate voted 39-1 to approve the deal. But the move shows what type of political appetite there is for online casinos in Florida.

Those demographics are unlikely to change during the next few election cycles. None of those businesses would want to lose market share to an expanding Seminole operation.

Online sports betting giants FanDuel and DraftKings funded a failed 2022 ballot initiative that would've allowed non-Florida companies to operate online sportsbooks in the Sunshine State.

The bottom line is that the bigger the state, the more complex it becomes to pass new gambling laws.
