According to the American Gaming Association, 33 states and the District of Columbia have already made sports betting legal and operational as of Jan.

Six other states have not yet legalized sports betting but have "active legislation/ballot initiative" on the subject, according to the association.

"Anytime that you increase access to gambling opportunities and you allow more people to participate across more forums, more modalities, and particularly continually, like 24-hour access on mobile devices, you are going to increase participation and you're going to increase the proportion of those people who are going to develop problems," she said.

That leaves it to the states to manage the potential problem of gambling addiction.

In the statement, the unit noted a recent study that shows 79% of Mainers gambled in 2022.

Lori Manson, Problem Gambling Services Coordinator at AdCare Educational Institute in Augusta, said responsible wagering programs can help those addicted to casino gambling.
