Besides location, other factors, such as experience, qualification, and job position, also determine how much Amazon drivers make in a year. As an Amazon driver, you can expect to deliver the orders within specific blocks to become eligible for commissions and payouts. We will dig deeper and evaluate their income, including their common expenses and the benefits Amazon drivers receive below.

Australia

Considering the minimum hourly salary of Amazon drivers, Australian Amazon drivers are in luck. They can expect to make around $20 minimum or AUD 29.8 an hour. Like other countries, the average salary of an Amazon driver can increase or decrease accordingly. For instance, you can expect to make AUD 28 hourly in New South Wales or even higher than that.

Performance

You can't be an Amazon driver without having a properly-maintained, qualified vehicle. It should be entirely fit for the delivery services. The driver must also ensure proper services and repairs of the car and get its fuel refilled when needed.

Working with Amazon is all about flexibility and convenience. The drivers can choose their schedules based on their availability. Once ready, they have to check the available slots on the Amazon app and immediately get details about the pick-up and drop-off locations. As mentioned earlier, you can make extra bucks by working more hours.

Amazon also offers an extensive health care plan for their drivers, including vision and dental insurance and access to medicines. With Amazon Care, you and your family members can also have 24/7 access to professional doctors and nurse consultations.

As an Amazon driver, you can call off sick or take informed days off whenever you feel mentally or physically unwell. These leaves will be paid. If you didn't fall sick the whole year or your leaves remain, you can also cash them out!
