Football is a very unpredictable game, especially when it comes to deciding the exact score of a future game.

The half-time or full-time market option is quite similar to the correct score market.

Let's paint a picture; say Manchester United is to host Chelsea at Old Trafford, then you'll be betting on say Chelsea to win, and Manchester to lose without a single goal.

In this market, what the bettor does is to add a deficit to one side of the game, say -1.

The market of first goalscorers is not guaranteed, however, it can yield great returns at the end of the day.
