The fake business Gold Lion Labs, which claimed to offer PCR testing services built up 19 five-star reviews on Facebook within five days thanks to the servi ces of these brokers.

When Which? looked into the profiles of the reviewers, it became clear that they had all reviewed many of the same businesses on Facebook. In total, 168 busines ses had been reviewed by the same 19 profiles who also left a five-star review f or the fake business set up by Which?

Things moved more slowly on Trustpilot, taking three weeks to gather 19 five-sta r reviews. However, by this point it had a 4.6 TrustScore on the site, far highe r than the health consultant business category average of 3.6 stars.

After the investigation, Facebook did remove some of the profiles used for fake reviews, while TrustPilot said it was considering legal proceedings against the review brokers.

The trouble is that all of these firms and the Government, for that matter h ave talked tough about clamping down on the issue of fake reviews, and yet here we still are.

The Government outlined plans for a bill which would ban fake reviews back in th e Queen’s Speech, but an awful lot has changed since then, so who can say ho w important this issue will be for them?

And so the problem drags on, with innocent shoppers continuing to be duped by fa ke reviews.

It can make you feel more confident and organized, and it can also help you mak e a good impression.
