Nearly every state that has launched its own iGaming market requires each online operator to hitch its wagon to a retail betting facility located in that state. While the world is filled with heated debates and arguments, I think something we can all agree on: fake product reviews suck. Whether you are a buyer or seller, fake product reviews ruin trust and reliability when it comes to online shopping. It is not a surprise that reviews are the backbone of online shopping. In some studies, it is reported at up to 80% of online shoppers use product reviews in some way, with 24.6% only trusting verified product reviews. Product reviews are essential to online shopping for multiple reasons like measuring a product's quality or build, testing a product's usefulness, and evaluating the value of a product. Fake reviews disrupt the process of online shopping since we never know if the reviews we read are from real customers or if it is from someone
