And it is the only measure that will deliver hundreds of millions of dollars each year to help solve homelessness and address mental health in California

Proposition 26, which is also known as the Tribal Sports Wagering Act, have been quick to try to frame the neighboring ballot initiative as deceptive and benefiting out-of-state interests.

The Corporate Online Gambling Proposition would legalize online and mobile sports gambling turning virtually every cell phone, laptop, tablet, and gaming console into a gambling device, increasing the risks of underage and problem gambling, said Cody Martinez, chairman of the Sycuan Band of the Kumeyaay Nation, in a June 27 press release from the tribal-backed Coalition for Safe, Responsible Gaming.

Both sides have already pledged to spend $100 million on their causes and have rolled out advertising to win over voters.

The backers of Proposition 27, the online sports betting measure, have pointed out that their model would require operators to partner with Native American tribes in the state.

After deducting regulatory costs, 85% of the government tax revenue raised by the measure's 10% levy is supposed to help fund interim and permanent housing

The remaining 15% of tax revenue would flow to tribes that are not participating in online wagering.

Proposition 27 would permit tribes to run their own online sportsbooks as well, after paying a one-time initial licensing fee of $10 million.
